

TO STRENGTHEN THE WINDSCREEN, WE PUT MORE PLASTIC IN IT.

All Volvos are fitted with laminated windscreens, and have been since 1944.

In recent years, though, we've specified "high impact" laminated glass.

Like ordinary laminated glass, it's made of two sheets of glass bonded together by a sheet of plastic.

Except that the sheet of plastic is twice as thick as in ordinary laminated glass.

The demonstration above illustrates what we mean by "high impact".

Under the watchful (and sceptical) eye of an AA observer, we fired a cricket ball directly at a Volvo 340's windscreen, at 105 mph.

(Actually, it was the MCC's bowling machine that fired the ball, since not even the fastest bowler in the world can bowl that fast.)

Although the photograph is a simulation of the test, it gives a true picture of what happened.

The ball ricocheted harmlessly away, leaving a cracked but intact windscreen.

And a very impressed AA observer.
